COLLECTION

In the 1920s, the Mediterranean coasts of France and Italy became forever synonymous with glamour, style, luxury and pleasure. A century later, the Riviera Collection by Burlington captures their unique spirit, and the extraordinary times that transformed them.

On the map, the Riviera is the stretch of sun-blessed coast between Marseilles and La Spezia. In our minds, though, it's a byword for glamorous, stylish living. Its famous resorts - Nice, St Tropez, Cannes, San Remo, Rapallo, Portofino - are the homes and holiday haunts of millionaires, champions and movie stars. It was here that the suntan first became fashionable, courtesy of Coco Chanel.

The Riviera Collection by Burlington is inspired by the Art Deco designs of the 1920s, which still grace luxury hotels, grand public buildings and private residences to this day.

After the hardship, drudgery and destruction of the Great War, the world was eager for comfort, excitement and change – and the 1920s delivered all three. Everyday life was transformed by a wave of energy, optimism and creativity, embracing everything from music and fashion to architecture and engineering. Suddenly, form was as important as function, and nothing embodied this philosophy more completely, effectively and beautifully than Art Deco. Art deco style is characterised by clean lines and straight edges, but there are no sharp right angles; corners are soft and rounded, creating a smooth, streamlined appearance. Designed entirely in the UK, the Riviera Collection is inspired by those classic principles, with forms, shapes and sizes subtly interpreted to make it suitable for period properties and contemporary settings alike.
